Why Singapore

In the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, Singapore has the second-highest overweight prevalence at 32.8 per cent. Furthermore, in terms of obesity prevalence and increase, the report states that there is considerable variation by ethnicity within a population. Malays had the highest prevalence of obese people in 2010 – at 24 per cent, Chinese had 7.9 per cent; and Indians suffered from higher obesity prevalence than Chinese, but were experiencing a slower increase over time. Secondly, abdominal fatness – an alternative measure of obesity – revealed a rather different story, in which Indians had both the highest obesity rates as a percentage, and the highest growth rate.

Obesity is increasing in prevalence in Singapore. This is part of a worldwide phenomenon. Action is being taken in Singapore to prevent and control obesity however. The need for obesity prevention and control has been recognized since the 1990s, and the country launched a National Healthy Lifestyle Program in 1992. It has a goal to control obesity through public education campaigns that focus on healthy eating and physical activity.

Singapore, an island country in Southeast Asia lies one degree (137 kilometers (85 mi)) north of the equator, at the southern tip of the Malay Peninsula, with Indonesia's Riau Islands to the south and Malaysia to the north. Singapore's territory consists of one main island along with 62 other islets. Singapore is a global commerce, finance and transport hub. Singapore is a medical tourism hub; almost around 200,000 foreigners seek medical care each year.

The skyscrapers and subways of a modern, affluent city with a medley of Chinese, Malay and Indian influences and a tropical climate, with tasty food, good shopping and a dynamic night-life scene make a great stopover to the region. The diversity of food is touted as a reason to visit the country, and the variety of food representing different ethnicities is seen by the government as a symbol of its multiculturalism.

A tropical rainforest climate is seen in Singapore with no separate seasons, uniform temperature and pressure, high humidity, and abundant rainfall. Temperatures range from 22 to 35 °C (72 to 95 °F). While temperature does not vary greatly throughout the year, there is a wetter monsoon season from November to January. The average temperature in the month of August is 24 °C to 30 °C
