NEED:

The development of future pioneers is a vital role for current nurse leaders. Despite recognition of the need to do succession planning, the absence of an adequate leadership has been a key challenge in present field of nursing. With the increasing complexity of healthcare practice environments and nurse leader retirements, the development of future nurse pioneers is highly demanding. Implementation of effective succession planning by identification and development of emerging nurse pioneers is currently recognized as an essential strategy in the healthcare.

One of the reasons for the growing demand is due to changing demographics; older nurses are retiring in large numbers, creating thousands of job openings. Another factor is the Affordable Care Act, which expands health insurance coverage to millions of job openings.

THE SUPPLY AND DEMAND - 2020 analyzes the growing need for qualified nurses. The research projects that the economy will create 1.6 million job openings for nurses through 2020. But there will not be enough nurses to fill those openings. We project the nursing workforce will be facing a shortfall of roughly 200,000 nursing professionals by 2020.

The expectation is that Nursing healthcare will reach 20 percent of the gross domestic product (GDP) by 2020

The 2nd World Congress again provided a great opportunity for nurses from around the world to share our research in an effort to advance nursing knowledge and practice. It was so exciting to learn how much we have in common as we all work to improve care for those who we serve.
